Editing the Genome: New Hope for Genetic Disorders

Duchenne muscular dystrophy (DMD) is a severe, progressive muscle disease caused by mutations in the Dystrophin gene, which encodes a large intracellular protein that maintains integrity of muscle cell membranes. More than 4,000 DMD mutations have been identified in humans. The majority of mutations are deletions that cluster in hot spots, such that skipping of out-of-frame exons can potentially restore the reading frame of the Dystrophin protein. We have used CRISPR/Cas9 to generate new mouse models of DMD lacking the most prominently deleted Dystrophin exons in humans. To permanently correct DMD by skipping mutant dystrophin exons in postnatal muscle tissue in vivo, we have used adeno-associated virus-9 (AAV9) to deliver CRISPR/Cas9 gene editing components to dystrophic mice, a method we refer to as Myoediting. We have also optimized Myoediting of many types of DMD mutations in muscle cells derived from iPS cells generated from blood samples of DMD patients. In a path toward clinical translation of gene editing for DMD, we have recently restored dystrophin expression of dogs with DMD following systemic administration of gene editing components with AAV9. Opportunities and challenges in the path toward permanent correction of disease-causing mutations responsible for DMD and other monogenic disorders by genomic editing will be discussed.

While a leader in the early days of replantation, the United States has fallen behind the rest of the world in recent decades. Fingertips, avulsion and crush injuries, single digits, zone II amputations, and multi-level injuries are routinely thrown away as "unreplantable" and textbook recommendations are used to bolster the decision to do so. In fact, many of these amputations are routinely salvaged in other parts of the world, especially in the Far East.

I have had the privilege of lecturing around the country on the need to revisit conventional wisdom and surgical dogma in replantation. These talks are often met with resistance, but I welcome the discourse. I believe every effort should be made to make patients whole after an injury. I feel fortunate to have had the opportunity to show reconstructive microsurgeons in the U.S. what is possible with replantation, and to question the dogma. As the ASRM 2019 Godina fellow, this topic will be the main thesis of my traveling fellowship. - Bauback Safa, MD
